

Advanced Digital Illustration – Process Explanation

In this illustration, the main focus was on a sword placed in the middle of a battlefield. I started by creating a rough layout to decide where the sword and background elements would be placed.

Next, I worked on the background by adding elements like fire, smoke, and broken structures to create a war-like environment. I kept the background slightly blurred so that the focus stays on the sword.

After that, I drew and detailed the sword carefully, adding textures like mud, reflections, and blood to make it look realistic. I used layering techniques to separate the sword, ground, and background for better control.

Then, I added shading and lighting. I used darker tones for the environment and brighter highlights on the sword so it stands out clearly. The red tones of the blood and orange tones of the fire were used to create contrast and intensity.

Finally, I refined the details, adjusted colors, and added effects like glow and blur to enhance depth and realism.
